He intended to have -tated his views freely upon the mestion, but in the harry of making p the decument in time to send it t Courtess, he omitted to do so. His pur ose was to call attention, in the first placeto the general misapprehension prealent in the c untry, that a large numer of people are disfranchised in the outh by the Fourteenth Amendment elief, which has been fostered by the Democratic newspapers, is wholly an eror, for in fact no man has been deprivd of the right to vote by the action of ongress or by the force of a Constituional amendment. All disfran hise ment has been by virtue of the laws enacted by the Southern States themseives, through their Legislatures, for which Congress is in no way responsible. This fact, the President thinks, ought to be more generally understood. He proposed, in the second place, to

In matters of this kind, relationship should not be considered-qualification and fitness should be theosly requisites. On this subject, Jobe Adams wrote to President Monroe, filly, as follows:

"I hope you will excuse me, sir, If I take the lib rty to express my opinion of the justice and prudence of this priniple. The hyper-superlative virtue of deneral Washington introduced it, but it has done more harm than good, and, in my judgment, the sconer it is dis countenanced the better.
